where they are now exhibited to the curious.

As to the prisoners, and the Frenchmen who guarded them, they did not awake till they had been near two hours on Dover Pier. The moment the English understood their situation, they changed places with their guard, and took back what they had been plundered of, but no more, for they were too generous to retaliate, and plunder them in return.

CHAPTER XVII.

Voyage eastward—The Baron introduces a friend, who never deceived him; wins a hundred guineas by pinning his faith upon that friend's nose—Game started at sea—Some other circumstances, which will, it is hoped, afford the reader no small degree of amusement.

IN a voyage which I made to the East Indies with Captain Hamilton, I took a favourite pointer with me: he was, to use a common phrase, worth his weight in gold, for he never deceived me. One day when we were, by the best observations we could make, at least three hundred leagues from land, my dog pointed: I observed him for near an hour with astonishment, and mentioned the circumstance to the captain and every officer on board, asserting, that we must be near land, for my dog smelt game. This occasioned a general laugh ; but that did not alter in the least the good opinion I had of my dog. After much conversation pro and con, I boldly told the captain, I placed more confidence in TRAY'S nose than I did in the eyes of every seaman on board ; and therefore boldly proposed laying the sum I had agreed to pay for my passage (viz. one hundred guineas) that we should find game within half an hour. The captain (a good hearty fellow) laughed again, desired Mr. Crawford, the surgeon, who was prepared, to feel my pulse : he did so, and reported me in perfect health. The following dialogue between them took place : I overheard it, though spoken low, and at some distance.

Captain. His brain is turned : I cannot with honour accept his wager.

Surgeon. I am of a different opinion ; he is quite sane, and depends more upon the scent of his dog, than he will upon the judgment of all the officers on board ; he will certainly lose, and he richly merits it.

Captain. Such a wager cannot be fair on my side ; however, I'll take him up, if I return his money afterward.

During the above conversation, Tray continued in the same situation, and confirmed me still more in my former opinion. I proposed the wager a second time: it was then accepted.

Done! and Done! were scarcely said on both sides, when some sailors who were fishing in the long-boat, which was made fast to the stern of the ship, harpooned an exceeding large shark, which they brought on board, and began to cut up for the purpose of barrelling the oil, when behold, they found no less than six brace of live partridges in this animal's stomach.

They had been so long in that situation, that one of the hens was setting upon four eggs, and a fifth was hatching when the shark was opened!!! [This young bird we brought up, by placing it with a litter of kittens that came into the world a few minutes before! The old cat was as fond of it as any of her own four-legged progeny, and made herself very unhappy when it flew out of her reach till it returned again. As to the other partridges, there were four hens amongst them; one or more were, during the voyage, constantly sitting, and consequently we had plenty of game at the Captain's table; and in gratitude to poor Tray (for being a means of winning one hundred guineas) I ordered him the bones daily and sometimes a whole bird.
